The latest scientific research shows that penile length is not exclusively inherited, but is also modified by environmental factors. Factors that may significantly disrupt hormonal balance:

- diet
- cultural conditions
- environmental pollution
- exposure to chemicals
- stress

Testosterone deficiency and its companions potency disorders affect an increasing number of men. Clinical symptoms observed in such cases result in deformations of the genital organs, including problems with erection and penis size.

Until recently, expensive therapies and surgical procedures were available only to the wealthiest. Men who were not satisfied with the size of their organs had to struggle with complexes, lack of sexual satisfaction and depression. Partial masculinity was a source of profound unhappiness. Yet there may be a solution simple, completely natural and brings results in a short time.

A member's functioning is influenced by many interrelated elements. That's why it gives the best results comprehensive treatment.

Erection begins after activation of the erectile center in the spinal cord, which sends an impulse to the sexual organs. The penis is composed of a pair of parallel corpora cavernosa, a corpus spongiosum forming the glans penis, and a bulb. An impulse from the core causes nitric oxide release by endothelial cells and by nerve endings in the corpora cavernosa of the penis. The arteries dilate. The pressure in the corpus cavernosum increases due to the blood pumped into them, and at rest the cavities are empty.

At the same time, as the blood pressure in the corpora cavernosa increases, the venous vessels gradually tighten, which results in a reduction in blood outflow. The result of these changes is penis enlargement and stiffness.

Greater satisfaction and self-confidence

If you are a man dissatisfied with the size of his penis, this feeling undermines your self-esteem. Self-confidence is a key feature of successful people, not only in the bedroom. How many times have you wondered if you really gave her pleasure? Isn't he faking it?
